112 Sword of Myles Standish.
Presented by William Trumbull Williams, of Lebanon, Conn., with the following certificate:

I, Ezra Standish, of Bozrah, in New London County, Connecticut, do certify, according to my best knowledge and belief, that the sword presented by William T. Williams, of Lebanon, in said State, to the Pilgrim Society, in Plymouth, in Massachusetts, was originally in the Standish family, and was brought up from Duxbury by my great-grandfather, as I have always been informed (Samuel Standish), and has ever been considered to have been the sword of Captain Myles Standish, one of the first settlers of the Plymouth Colony, and my ancestor—and I have no reason to doubt the fact. Ever since my remembrance it has been in the family, and has ever descended to the oldest son. My cousin, Lodowick Standish, sold it to said Williams. It was always called the Ancient Sword, and was always considered as a valuable relic. Lodowick is gone to Canada. The hilt of the sword is not the same that was on the original sword—the old hit was larger, and was called a basket hilt. The blade has on it the figures of the sun, moon and stars, and I think the figures 1149 in a circle, and on the blade letters or characters with which I am unacquainted.

EZRA STANDISH.

Bozrah, the 27th day of September, 1824.

New London County, Bozrah, 27th September, 1824.

Ezra Standish, aforesaid, personally appeared before me and made oath to the truth of the aforesaid facts.

Sworn to before me, WILLIAM T. WILLIAMS, Jus't Peace.

Inscription and History of the Sword of Myles Standish.

This sword is, without doubt, of ancient Persian manufacture, called by the Orientals Dharban, viz., Meteor; and the material of which it is made is thunderbolt iron. There is not the least doubt that this sword fell into the hands of the Saracens at the time of the defeat of the Persian tyrant warrior, Kozoori, when Jerusalem was wrenched from him by the Khalif Omar I., 637. The inscriptions and emblems show clearly the above facts. On closely examining the sun and moon engraved on the blade it will be seen that faces were engraved inside the sun and moon, and on closer examination of the faces it will be noticed that the engraver did not intend to represent them as human, but lions' faces. History says that the sun, moon and stars were worshiped by the ancient Persians as the celestial deities of strength and power—the sun predominant, and the lion the terrestrial emblem of the sun, whose head, surrounded by his shaggy mane, resembles the deity he represents.

The present Persian coat-of-arms is derived from the mythology of their predecessors; the sun rising on a lion's back, crowned by the moon and with a circle of stars around her.

Ancient swords and other weapons were said to have often been made from meteoric iron, and it has always been believed by the ancient as well as the modern orientals that that material had an invaluable virtue of good luck in it, and a charm to its possessor. It is said by Arab historians that the Prophet (Mohammed) and his successors were armed with Dharban swords; that when grasped against the enemies of the religion of the faithful the warrior had nothing to do but face the enemies—the sword would do the destruction. It was believed by them that the virtue of the metal would strengthen them against fatigue of the muscles, and charm their lives from the attack and thrust of the enemy.

The three inscriptions, as seen on the blade (one on the same side with the Persian emblems, and the other two on the other side) were engraved by the Mohammedans, and at a much later period than the Persian emblems. They are each different in hand and form. The first named of the two is the Mediaeval Cufic.

The interpretation is: "With peace God ruled His slaves, and with judgment of His arm He gave trouble to the valiant of the mighty courageous"—meaning the wicked. On the reverse side of the blade are the two above-mentioned inscriptions, part of one of which only can be deciphered: "In God is all might." The last line, that resembles Roman numerals, is not intended for a date, as one would be led to suppose, but it is of private significance, not known to anybody excepting the possessor who had it engraved. The same with the other on the same side with the Mediæval Cufic. No one can decipher it, as this is the key to the charm, and when once deciphered by anybody besides its real owner it becomes as valueless as a reed. Before closing our remarks let us notice above the two separate inscriptions; and here we find engraved again a combination of circles, intended to represent fire, and a conical shaft, to remind one of the meteoric metal of which the blade is made.

N. B.—It is not to be wondered at, then, that European and American scholars have failed to decipher the above. Even a medium Arabic scholar—and he more advanced than any foreign scholar in the vernacular language of his country—cannot decipher all the modern handwritings without giving an especial time and hard study, the Arabic language being so divided in itself, unlike any other in the world. Anyone brought up in one calling cannot decipher the hands of others, and it will at once be seen how difficult and impossible it would be for any professor or scholar to master a language that needs almost a lifetime to acquire it perfectly.

Having endeavored to serve the owners of this valuable relic of the past, in giving a faithful interpretation of the inscription thereon,

I remain, with the greatest respect, their obedient servant,
1881. JAMES ROSEDALE, of Jerusalem Holy.
